

ALL THE MILLE MIGLIA 1927/1957 CARS

HOW TO READ THE DATA CORRECTLY

Compiling a complete list of all the models that took part in what was defined the "most beautiful race in the world" over the thirty-year period is highly impracticable, as it is impossible to check the exact features of all the registered cars.

Even if we were to examine every application form in the Historical Archives of the Mille Miglia, we would still come up with many question marks as at the time it was customary to note just the make and c.c. and rarely the model.

Even the official race publications, starting from the yearbooks (the so-called "numeri unici"), nearly always contain just these two pieces of information which were needed to determine the class and category.

It is also very difficult, especially for the first decade of the race, to understand who actually built the vehicles, given that the leading car manufacturers often sold only the chassis and mechanical parts without the body.

The regulations stated that you could attribute the name of the engine or the chassis to the car, but the problem was they often came from different suppliers. In the late Thirties, dozens of artisans, body shops and preparers began building racing cars in small series. In most cases, they used Fiat engines but often all that remained of them was the block because they would replace all the other parts.

We have tried, where possible and by cross-referencing our different sources, to attribute the cars to the actual manufacturers, so these pioneers of sports car racing receive the recognition they rightly deserve.

In all the post-war Mille Miglia races, 95% of the cars in the Racing Sports Cars 750 cc and 1100 cc categories were entered as Fiats, even though the Turin manufacturer has never produced "siluri", "barchette" or "berlinette", except for the famous 1100 "Gobbone".

We must also bear in mind that the smaller body shops did not hold a manufacturing licence. When building their cars, they would buy an engine from Giannini or Stanguellini and a tubular chassis (in most the cases a Gil-Co) and commission the body work to skilled craftsmen. At the starting line the result of their efforts invariably appeared simply as a "Fiat", referring to the mechanical parts which represented the starting point of their work.

These cars were then often re-worked during their racing life.

The case of the coach builder and driver Achille Fona, in the list below, is emblematic. Four different models are attributed to him but it is actually the same car: every year this coach builder from Brescia replaced the car body, renewing it in compliance with the regulations and transforming it from a "siluro" to a "barchetta", also modifying the engine according to the latest specifications or replacing it.

Continuous changes to the regulations resulted in dozens of classes and categories, and changes were made to the cars accordingly. Dealing with this issue of details and particulars would require too much space; for a better understanding of the influence the regulations had on the cars, let's just consider one episode dating back to 1952 when the new regulations of the racing sports category required that the mudguards were incorporated in the body.

All the "siluro" cars were modified accordingly, with the body totally replaced or, more economically, bicycle fenders joined to the car body.

The organizers of the Mille Miglia, often in ill-concealed contrast with CSAI, found ways of getting round the regulations in order to have a greater number of participants take part in the race. This led to the creation of special classes and subclasses, with more classifications and hence a larger number of cash prizes, heightening its appeal.

Making sense of all these categories is no mean feat, even for the most experienced, and it is extremely difficult to attribute a given car to one of the three main categories recognized today (Touring,

Grand Touring and Racing Sport). This becomes a real problem when calculating the coefficient, which takes into account the model as well as its age.

The most striking case is that of cars built before 1937. Until that year, the Touring category did not exist and all the cars taking part in the race were considered Racing Sport, including sedans.

Organizers decided to remedy this situation with the creation of the "Utility" categories, including great series and "Saloon" cars. The trend today is to attribute the Touring category to these models, even if it did not exist at the time.

Some models, like the Alfa 6C 1750 GT (closed and with only two doors), would appear to belong more to the Grand Touring category which was only introduced in 1950.

English cars from the early Fifties (Austin Healey, MG, Triumph, etc.) were also extremely difficult to allocate: because of their characteristics, these models began competing in the Racing Sports category where they suffered the overwhelming superiority of Ferrari and Maserati which, despite having the same c.c., were much more powerful and lighter.

In 1956, a subclass was introduced in the Racing Sports category for "Open-air body racing sports car special group with price limit".

It is clear that calculating the coefficient of some vehicles is a real problem, often working against the interests of the owners. Here are two examples: the Triumph TR2 Sports, which is considered by many today a GT, took part in the Mille Miglia three times in the Racing Sports category (once in the special group); the Ferrari 250 GT, as its very name suggests, should be a Grand Touring and in this category it has won many times.

There is no doubt that compared to a Jaguar XK of the same c.c., the 250 GT (which, with Gendebien, set a record on the Mantua-Brescia leg with an average speed of over 199 km/h) is a racing car whose characteristics are typical of a Racing Sport, for example its tubular chassis and light aluminium body.

We have tried to be as accurate as possible in giving the names of the classes and categories, avoiding any interpretation.

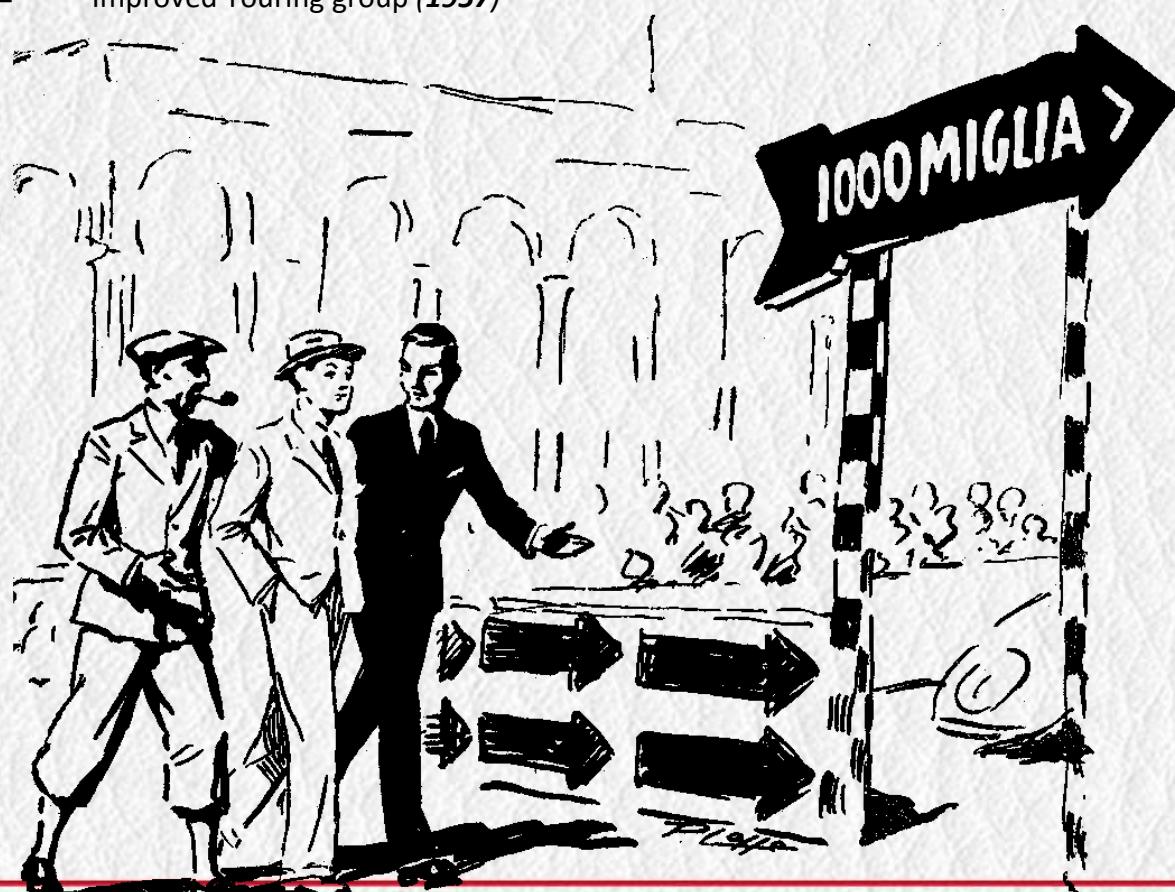

Following the name of each model are the year (or years) of participation, category and class.

It often happened that the same model participated in two different categories at the same time, depending on the level of preparation; or, the category was changed over the years: in both cases, the different description follows the previous one, model by model.

TOTAL NO. OF MAKES: 173 - TOTAL NO. OF MODELS: 902

NOTES:

This list includes only the cars that officially started from Viale Venezia in the 1927 - 1957 Mille Miglia races.

The other cars, even if registered, have not been included. This is the case of the ALCA VOLPE, the French BNC, LOMBARD and STAL, the German HOTCHKISS and the British KIEFT and BENTLEY.

Although they were included in the starting list, the vehicles of these makes did not actually start.

Two curiosities worth a brief explanation.

The ALCA Volpe is considered to be one of the most famous scams of the last century: in March 1947, ALCA introduced the Volpe with a two-cylinder two-stroke 124 cm<sup>3</sup> rear engine, 6 HP, 5000 rpm and a speed of 75 km/h.

To advertise it, five cars were registered to take part in the Mille Miglia in the supercharged version, without a hood, with an aerodynamic tail and built-in headrest. Later, orders started to arrive.

The Volpe cars did not show up at the starting line of the Mille Miglia 1947 and nobody ever heard of them again.

Some ten cars should have been produced: in 1948 ALCA was accused of fraudulent bankruptcy having collected advance payments from customers who had placed orders for this car, for a total of about 300 million lire, some six million Euro today.

KIEFT applied to take part in the Mille Miglia 1956 but suffered an accident as it was being brought to Brescia. It did not show up so was removed from the starting list.

Some sources cite UNION and PETRARCA-FIAT among the cars on the starting grid, but our researches did not find any evidence to prove this.

Car number 622 in the starting list of year 1950, the 1100 LEONE designed by Savonuzzi and with an SVA chassis, appears in some lists as a FIAT SM.

According to some sources, Urania and Giaur (Giannini-Urania) are called TARASCHI from the surname of Bernardo Taraschi, a driver and coach builder from Ukraine.

AUTHOR'S NOTE:

As explained in the preface, the name of the cars was not given in full, not even on the application form. While it has been relatively easy to classify production cars and those made by the major manufacturers, it was a different story for models built by craftsmen and assemblers.

Similarly, it has not been easy to attribute a final name to unique models commissioned by private drivers (for instance with a Gilco chassis, an Ermini or Stanguellini engine and the livery by a skilled coach builder).

This is the reason why the above list is not complete, although it includes more than nine hundred models.

All those who wish to help us complete this list and are in possession of documents from reliable sources, may write to info@1000miglia.it
